

In Malaysia, pets are not considered in the same manner as children in any separation. This is irrespective of the emotional attachment that you, your partner or family have to them. So, it is best to draft an Arrangements for Pets so that the court, if they decide to, can use when deciding on your case.

It is possible that the court does not take this unofficial arrangement for your pets into consideration. If you are not separating via court however, then an Arrangements for Pets form documents your mutual agreement towards your pet.

1 Current arrangements

- Where they live, who with and who looks after them.
- The diet and physical needs of your pet.
- Who is supporting them.
- Any current access arrangements.

2 Proposed arrangements post separation

- Where they will live, who with and who will look after them.
- The diet and physical needs of your pet.
- Who will be supporting them.

3 A list of any special conditions that your pet is subject to

An Arrangements for Pets document is best used to sign with your partner, if you both agree to the terms.

If not, you must consult your lawyer for your options and chances to let the court decide on your pets.
